As most of us know, 2020 was a year of polar opposites in the business world. Some businesses went bust while others boomed and set new records.

One profitable line of work during the pandemic? Selling illicit goods and services on the Dark Web.

These darknet markets hauled in a record amount of revenue last year, with customers around the globe spending $1.7 billion in cryptocurrency.

Chainalysis, which tracks this kind of spending, shared new research breaking down darknet markets and their geographic distinctions in 2020.

Dark Web markets: record spending in 2020

The chart below reveals darknet market revenue and the number of transfers to those markets. The gold line shows that the actual number of individual transfers dropped in 2020, but the orange bars show that 2020 was the first year for darknet market revenue to top $1.5 billion.
